ROLL OF HONOUR 1939 1945

INTRODUCTION

Following on from our First World War project which remembered those police officers from our predecessor forces who made the ultimate sacrifice in that conflict, we have embarked on similar work in respect of the Second World War.

This booklet is the result of that research. It includes brief details of all those whose names appear on memorials at Police Headquarters in Bridgend, Cardiff Bay Police Station, and Swansea Central Police Station, together with others who lost their lives.

In undertaking the research, differences between the two world wars became apparent:

- 93 officers from the Glamorgan Constabulary, Cardiff City Police, Swansea Borough Police and Merthyr Tydfil Borough Police lost their lives as a result of service in the armed forces in the First World War. There were far fewer in the Second: 43 from Glamorgan, Cardiff, and Swansea.
- All of those who died during the First World War were regular police officers whereas in the Second there was a mixture of regular officers, war reserve constables, special constables, and civilian staff.
- Virtually all those in the first conflict died as a result of service in the army. In the Second World War the casualties were spread through the Royal Navy and Merchant Navy (3), the Army (15) and Royal Air Force (25). The preponderance of the latter reflects the importance of the war in the air and particularly in relation to the bombing campaigns against the enemy. Indeed, 16 of the 25 died whilst serving with Bomber Command.
- There are also geographical differences between the conflicts. The vast majority of those in the First World War died as a result of service in France and Belgium. Those from the Second are buried in graves and remembered on memorials throughout the world: in addition to the United Kingdom, they are found in Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Malta, Malaysia, Myanmar (Burma), the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United States and Tunisia.
- Finally, in relation to these differences there is one which is particularly important, which is that, whilst there were some enemy air raids on the United Kingdom during the First World War, their extent during the Second was reflected in the thousands of civilians who lost their lives and were injured during the devastation of places such as London, Coventry, and Plymouth. South Wales suffered too. Cardiff experienced heavy raids, and bombs were also dropped on Cwmparc in the Rhondda, causing loss of life and injury. Swansea endured many raids, the most severe of which took place on the nights of 19th, 20th, and 21st February 1941 (“the Three Nights’ Blitz”), when over 600 people were killed or injured and the town centre was largely destroyed.

Police officers played their full part in civil defence. Two officers from the Swansea Borough Police were killed on duty during bombing and three died from the Glamorgan Police: two in the bombing of Cwmparc and one on the Gower Peninsula when a marine mine exploded. In Cardiff one officer was killed on duty as a result of enemy air raids. A further two off duty officers died and family members were also killed. In this Roll of Honour, we have recorded all of them alongside those who died on military service.

We mentioned earlier that this booklet contains brief details of those we are remembering. Our intention is to produce a further booklet in due course which will tell the individual stories more fully. In the meantime, we hope that this Roll of Honour will be a fitting tribute to those who died. They will not be forgotten.
